

Many Policy Agendas For The Next Mayor

by {ga=ggstaff}

Monday, August 19, 2013 05:09 PM - Last Updated Wednesday, August 13, 2014 02:16 PM

The New York City Bar Association wants the next mayor to reform stop-and-frisk. Just Food, a nonprofit that connects local farms to communities, wants the next mayor to end hunger. The Center for an Urban Future, a policy think-tank, proposes a kindergarten-to-college savings program and an immigrant export initiative.

Organizations from around the five boroughs are attempting to push their policy agendas in an attempt to influence the next City Hall administration. Many have released lengthy reports and held news conference to announce their positions.

We've compiled a list of some of them and will be adding more as the campaign goes on. Did we miss something? Send us an email at info@gothamgazette.com

A Platform For The Future Of The City The American Institute of Architects New York Chapter pro
A+ Education Roadmap This report highlights educational policy recommendations compiled by A+ I
Affordable Housing Priorities Housing First has put together a seven-point plan to address affordabl
Blueprint for Neighborhoods United Neighborhood House's compilation of a wide ranging policies to Employment and Training Agenda for Mayoral Candidates. New York City Employment and

Food Policy Priorities Just Food's priorities for the future of food in New York City.
Good Place to Work Hard Place to Live Recommendations for strengthening the city's affordable ho
Innovation and the City Part 1 This report spotlights 15 innovative policies for the next mayor create Innovation in the City Part 2 This report highlights 25 innovative policies by the Center for an Urban
New York City Bar Recommendations New York City Bar Association recommendations for the next
The New Face of New York's Seniors The Center for an Urban Future gives recommendations on w
Transportation Priorities for a Sustainable City Transportation priorities for a sustainable new York C