"We've known Dan Garodnick as an advocate, a colleague and a public servant for more than a decade. Dan shares my commitment to integrity and reform in government. Those are exactly the values that we need first and foremost in the City Comptroller's office," said Sen. Liz Krueger, in her endorsement of Councilman Dan Garodnick for city comptroller today.

The Democratic Primary is 13 months away, but with the race for mayor heating up, the race for comptroller is also getting early play.

Garodnick appears to be the only declared candidate for the position. Current City Comptroller John Liu is an assumed mayoral candidate, but his run has been clouded with a federal investigation into his supporter's fundraising practices. Councilman Domenic Recchia is also considered a likely candidate for the position.

Garodnick has already raised $1.2 million for his bid, according to the city's Campaign Finance Board website.

Garodnick returned Krueger's praise in a statement, saying: "Since her first day in office, no one has fought harder for reform in Albany than Liz Krueger. I welcome her support to our rapidly-growing coalition for thoughtful, independent financial leadership for the City of New York."

Krueger formed the No Bad Apples PAC to support progressive candidates for the State Senate.
